Proper Motion in Swimming

Swimming Lesson-No. 2

Expert Elionsky Describes Methods of Relaxing and Laws of Motion When in Water-Move in Direction Opposite From Which You Pull or Push to Make Headway.

By Harry Elionsky. (Handicap and Long Distance Swimming Champion of the World.)

(Written Exclusively for The Evening World.) We always move in the opposite direction that we push or pull the water, like the propellers of a ship in the water, with the blades at such an angle that they drive the water astern, which in turn drives the ship

if we want to go down we pull the water up. If we want to go forward and downward (as in a front somersault), we pull the water upward and backward. In other words, we always move in the opposite direction that we push or pull the water.

This should be kept in mind while attempting all stunts and strokes in the water. The same applies to swimming on the back and swimming under water. All our actions in the water are controlled by the laws of action. For instance, some people wonder why, when they work so hard, they never make any headway.

big fear of the managers and owners is that a number of players who might remain with their clubs until summoned for some kind of active One of the most important reasons is that when they pull their hands back, as in the breast stroke, instead of pulling the water back, which they should do to move fancy.
